Nominated seats for women, an empty gesture by the government

Part 1

We read with keen interest the call by women some time ago suggesting that it is the 'mindset of PNG men' that limits the progress of women in the country.

then Dr. Orovu Sepoe, Coordinator for gender equality on political governance from UNIFEM said words to the effect that 'the debate on the issue of nominated seats in the past session of Parliament showed one basic factor - that the mindset of Papua New Guineans in general was that women could not be involved in politics at the highest level'.

The call for women to be given the opportunity to partake in the political economy of this country is not something new. Time and time again, we pay lip service to the cause for women whenever we get an opportunity to speak out in public, but after the speeches and the pleasantries that follow, nothing by way of concrete action comes into fruition and the topic returns to limbo and the discrimination and the sexual advances in the work place goes on as usual, and the abuse and personal degradation meted out by the husbands at the home front is an everyday event that goes unchecked by the law enforcement agencies. The police follow a maxim that says: "Wife beating is a domestic problem that falls outside the ambit of the Summary Offences Act and the provisions of the PNG Criminal Code", hence, the police will send the woman back to the house to be further beaten up by that member of the animal kingdom, who calls himself, "a man".

We of this column, share the same concerns as any concerned PNG community and we support the call by Dr. Sepoe of UNIFEM, Lawyer Josepha Namsu and Maria Hayes, the President of Women in Politics, for women to be given the opportunity to partake in the political economy of this country.

To date, the topic of advancement of women in general has not had a fair and impartial hearing from the PNG community at large for a number of reasons.

Firstly, the educated community at large and men in particular dismiss the topic as being too wide and general and problematic so that the fight for advancement of women is seen as a problem for a philosophical debate at that superficial level. And given this lack of articulation of the problem and the obvious lack of identification and definition of the individual issues involved, we have not seen a positive and meaningful national policy for advancement of women in this country and neither have we seen any meaningful State-sponsored proposals for participation by women in the socio-political and economic life of this country. It is one of those much talked about topics that never seem to get translated into any action.

That being the case, we suggest that each community or interest group ought to pick up the cause for women and that way, assist women to articulate the general problem and the individual issues in the context of the interest group at work so that through such grouping each one of us can assist in the cause in a small way. And at the home front, the husband should do his part by respecting his wife and treat her in the same way that he expects her to treat him. It is all about self-respect so that if the husband has any self respect then he ought to respect his wife.

Thus, if the cause for women is "localized" in this fashion so that each of us can contribute to the cause at that micro-level then this practice should pick up speed at the national level so that the government adopts a concrete and action based policy for advancement of women in education, training, and the job placement and that way, give the cause for women a boost in the right direction.

Meanwhile, the male energy for violence against women should be addressed in a meaningful way so that more men and husbands are put behind bars for a minimum of three months each time they practice this cowardly act of beating up their wives or any man beating up any woman for that matter. And in the field of education, for example, female students should be entitled to rebates in school fees upon completion of Grade 12 or universities or be exempted altogether from school fees.

These are some of the concrete proposals we should be talking about to address the problem and not getting three women to sit on those glorious seats in the national parliament.

How will getting three women to man the 3 nominated seats in parliament help the cause for women?

We agree with Sir Mekere Morauta that if we are serious about getting our women involved in the political life of this country, then parliament must pass appropriate legislation dealing with the status of 'nominated' members of parliament, be they men or women. There ought to be appropriate provisions in the law stating what their status will be, what their voting rights are and whether they will be subject to leadership code, whether they qualify to be appointed ministers of state, whether they will be allowed to join political parties, whether they will vote in motions of no confidence and there are many more issues which ought to be identified and provisions made for.

We are not entirely satisfied that the recent move by the government to put 20 women in parliament as 'nominated members' is a wise move.

We fail to see how this move will assist the cause for women in the long run though, at that superficial level, it may seem like a good idea.

Here we are, trying to prop women up on that high pedestal as if they are totally incapable of climbing up there on their own strength and on merit. We say this is self defeating.

If women have any self respect, they will refuse the empty offer to occupy the nominated seats and fight for something more substantive like equal opportunity to occupy the electoral seats won through the normal electoral process.

Thus, if the political parties in government are serious in their concern for involvement by women then they should all undertake to nominate more female candidates to stand for elections in the coming 2012 national elections, so that upon winning their respective seats, women can then participate meaningfully in the political life of this country.

It is only then that we can all agree that women are participating meaningfully in politics and on equal footing with men.

Anything less than that is an empty gesture by a government wishing to sell itself as a populist government.
