PART 2

No constitutional rationale for appointment of 23 nominated women among 109 members in an elected parliament

IN the last column, we highlighted some of the comments by women that they were not advancing in society because men were stopping their advancement in PNG society. And we agreed that there was some truth in that suggestion.

However, having said that, let us suggest at the same time that women were not helping their cause if they sat on their bums and expected men to run around doing things for them either. We say the initiative must come from the women themselves.

If you look at the manner in which women have conducted themselves in organizations like National Council of Women, it is a total fiasco. When it comes to leadership issues in these organizations, there is hardly any consensus. They will be fighting one and another, accusing each other of wrong doing, organising splinter groups to gossip or work against the leadership, and basically create as many obstacles as possible for the duly-elected leadership. Just look at what happened recently, when a group of women fronted up outside the Parliament House and confronted Dame Kidu simply because one of them was not on the list of candidates for the nominated seats in the parliament and this was publicized in the newspapers in the country.

If this is the kind of conduct women will display in public, then whom does one blame for the lack of progress in the life of a woman?

If you look around to see how women have progressed in Papua New Guinea, you will note that from past experience, it was women themselves who took the initiative to advance in their lives.

Examples that come to mind are Dame Josephine Abaijah, Rose Kekedo, Nahau Rooney, and Meg Taylor.

One thing that stands out clearly when you study the lives of these women is that they had the initiative, the drive and the will power, or sheer guts if you want to put it that way, to push themselves to the limit and that way break the psychological barrier that holds women apart from men. These women did not sit around and blame men and men's mindset for their misfortunes in the social and political setting in Papua New Guinea.

If you look around this country now, which women are following in the footsteps of Abaijah, Kekedo, Rooney and Taylor? NIL.

Presently, it is a desolate landscape. And where are all the women and what are they doing now? Does that mean, women are not sitting idle and waiting for the 23 nominated seats in parliament so they can all scramble for them? What a shame for our women folk.

Yes, we will concede that there are cultural constraints and social conditioning that make up a psychological barrier that a woman must overcome in her advancement in the PNG society, but these are all about 'mind games'.

No woman who wants to advance can be held back so ultimately, the ball keeps bouncing back to the women's court.

Thus, we suggest that if women want to advance, then they better study the lives of our women who did make it to the top. Women should make it their business to invite Abaijah, Rooney and Taylor and get some insight into how they made it, instead of sitting on their bums, biting their fingernails and bitching about men because they feel powerless in society.

And on the topic of the 23 nominated seats in the national parliament, we suggest that Dame Kidu and her likes should find some other way to help women than putting dog collars around 23 women and leading them into the parliament to sit on those 23 disgraceful seats. This is sacrilege to say the least. Under the PNG Constitution, the national parliament is an elected house of parliament, and NOT a NOMINATED house of parliament.

Yes, we agree that there may be room to nominate one to three people to sit in parliament for the life of that parliament, but the idea that we should nominate 23 women to occupy 23 seats in the house is quite extraordinary, as it is also stupid. That number of women amounts to 20% of the total number of seats in the parliament. And most of all, what we disagree with is the violation of the fundamental principle that our parliament is an elected parliament when it becomes swamped with 23 non-elected members. Can anybody out there answer this question?

Secondly, where is the constitutional rationale for allowing women to have a second bite at the cherry? Don't they also cast their votes for their respective candidates during the national elections? And if the answer is in the affirmative, then by what constitutional formula are they now allowed to occupy 23 seats themselves to speak for women who already have their own elected members in parliament?

Is this what we call, double representation? If it is not, then in that event, the whole thing becomes superfluous. This is one of those least thought out actions by the government.

Should we not send the matter back to the people and ask them if it is OK for their House to be made up of 20% NON-ELECTED members? If that is feasible, then why not have 25% nominated members and have only 25% elected members?

This is exactly what we Papua New Guineans should be scared of and that is, that a government of the day should take it upon itself to place in positions of power and privilege, people whom the government chooses and not people elected by the people. This is how dictatorship takes root and slowly spreads into the whole spectrum of government and then given time, the entire machinery of State will be manned by people whom the government has selected for its own grip on power and resources.

You can see the way the entire public service works today. The Departmental Heads are all 'YES' men unlike people in the past like Sir Bouraga, Pius Kerepia and Sir Alkan Tololo who were learned men with integrity and who stood for what is right and proper and they stood up to the politicians.

What do we have now? Little moles who will gossip about their subordinates and if they feel threatened by their juniors because of their level of academic qualifications, or their skill and expertise, these juniors are quickly made to leave the department or any public corporation.

Thus, the trend this National Alliance Government has been following is really a very dangerous trend leading us into dictatorship. You look at the Constitution: they have amended the provisions making leaders liable for breaches of the leadership code.

And now, they are waiting to amend the Organic Law on Duties and Responsibilities of Leaders. And more damning, recently they have outlawed third party proceedings against major resources development companies in this country.

The one question that comes up time and time again is: WHOSE INTEREST IS THIS NATIONAL ALLIANCE GOVERNMENT SERVING?

If you look behind the scene you will note that all the things which this government has done is all about maintaining power, crushing any forces in their way and in that manner make it easier for the government to manipulate the people into their way of doing things. Look at the LNG Project for example and there you can see clearly how these politicians have swept all the threshold issues under the carpet and forced the people to give their consent to the Project through lies and plain deceit.

And now that the people want the politicians to keep their promises, the ministers and departmental heads concerned are all passing the buck and blaming one and other.

And whilst these politicians are conducting themselves in this fashion, who will control them? Under the former system, it was the duty of the Ombudsman Commission to control them.

However, you see the way the Maladina Amendments were passed, you can appreciate that slowly, the government is taking away the powers of the Commission so that given time, we will wake up one day to find out that the Commission is no longer what it was supposed to be. All its major powers will have been removed. For instance, presently, the Maladina Committee on the Ombudsman Commission has been given the same power of investigation as the Commission?

Why? Well, our hunch is that in time, the government will say: 'The Ombudsman Commission is no longer necessary because the Maladina Committee can do what the Commission was empowered to do, therefore, the Commission should go because it is now duplicating the functions of the Maladina Committee. Well, there you are!

Finally, getting back to the question of advancing women by appointment of 23 of them to sit in parliament, we say this government and those individuals behind this farce must rethink their roles and strategy to devise a more tangible system.

The big question we raise here is: 'How will placing 23 women in parliament advance the cause for women?'

If this government is really serious about the cause for women, then in that event, it must formulate a comprehensive social program that includes education, training and job placements for women. And these are matters which can be achieved administratively by the administrative machinery of government.

Look at the Department of Social Welfare and you want to ask: 'What does that Department do? Is this not the Department that should come up with such programs? Is this not the Department that should implement such programs by soliciting funds locally and through the national budgetary process?"

All in all, what we are suggesting is that the cause for advancement of women is a noble idea. However, the way to achieve that is not by appointing 23 women in Papua New Guinea. What you are doing is really finding jobs for 23 women and nothing more, because what can they do in Parliament that they cannot do outside parliament?

Thus, it is our view that there is administrative machinery in place to advance the cause of women in this country. Let us make administrative decisions by adopting a comprehensive plan for improving the status of women in this country. Then we implement it with funds allocated by the government. Let the department of social welfare handle this matter in that fashion.

There is no need to resort to legislative means to achieve this program of improvement when we can do it administratively. We have all lost the plot here. We have in our blind zeal, gone for the worst possible means to achieve a very simple program. We have decided to NOMINATE and that way place 23 women to sit in a parliament of ELECTED members. This is a violation of the principle of parliamentary supremacy whereby our members shall be elected members and it is this fact that gives them the status as lawmakers for the country.

Do not pollute the house with nominated members!

Maintain the sanctity of the people's house of ELECTED members.

And where do we place these 23 nominated members? What are they? Parliamentary observers? So ultimately, what it all amounts to is that now we will have an additional 23 members of parliament with all the perks of office and where do the rest of the women come in? If we are really serious that this is the way to go about it, then why not round up all the women in Papua New Guinea and make them all members of parliament? If done that way, then we can realistically say that we are advancing the cause for women in this country. We should discard this piece of ill-thought out legislation.

There is something wrong with us Papua New Guineans. It looks as if this country is being run by a mob of imbeciles who will dream up the most atrocious plan of action to solve a very simple social problem. We have this propensity for grandeur, pomp and ceremony but little substance. Thus, we will always roam within the realm of mediocrity and take things for their face value without a glimpse beyond appearances to see what lies beyond. This thing about 23 nominated members is one such farce; a fantasy akin to Alice in Wonderland. Now it is Dame Kidu in Timbucktu.
