A crooked government by the crooks for the crooks

In the commencing paragraph of this column last week, we posed the question:

"Any truth in the suggestion that politics and prostitution are both the oldest professions in the world?"

On of our readers wrote in, thus: "Two professions? You're joking! There is only one oldest profession in the world. And it is a calling "to serve" people. Out of politeness, we call those engaged in the trade, "politicians", rather than the vulgar term, "prostitutes". Thank you for your correction. Please, no further comments!"

Apart from the oldest profession above, we are also told that the oldest military treatise in the world, The Art of War, was written by a Chinaman, Sun-Tzu, some 2,500 years ago. In one chapter under the heading, "Attack Under Strategem", the author says:-

"Now the general is the bulwark of the State:

If the bulwark is complete at all points, the State will be strong; if the bulwark is defective,

The State will be weak.

There are three ways in which a ruler can bring misfortune upon his army:-

(1) By commanding the army to advance or to retreat, being ignorant of the fact that it cannot obey. This is called hobbling the army.

(2) By attempting to govern an army in the same way as he administers a kingdom, being ignorant of the conditions which obtains in an army.

(3) By employing the officers of his army without discrimination, through ignorance of the military principles of adaptation to circumstances. This shakes the confidence of the soldiers."

The above is a timely reminder to Sir Michael Somare that whether he survives the coming onslaught by the looming Motion of No Confidence and how he does that would have already been determined by his past conduct in both the manner in which he had governed the country in general and in particular the manner in which he had been mistreating the many politicians supporting him in parliament as back benchers.

For our general readers, the dictionary definition of 'bulwark' is 'anything used for protection or defence'. Thus, the first quote above would mean that the general is the protector or the defence for his country so that if the general is strong in all points, the country will be strong, but if the general is defective, the country will be defective.

Seen in the context of the above, it is true that the way this country is performing now is a true reflection or questing the rights of the government to grant such approval to these developer companies; and

(g) giving the holder of the approval unlimited power to destroy the environment without any control or supervision by the government.

These are signs that Sir Michael and his mob in government cannot be trusted to look after the people and their interests including their lands, rivers, lakes, the seas and the whole environment. Right now, what they are doing is consolidating their political power and using that power base to enrich themselves. Like we said in the last column, politics in this country is all about power and money for the politician and his cronies.

With the Organic Law on political parties gone, the Opposition has a chance to overthrow this government, but our hunch is that this government will not allow that to happen. If the Opposition does succeed in getting the motion as far as on to the floor of parliament, then the government will still defeat the motion and come out the winner. But the cost of introducing that motion will be that the national treasury will be emptied of all its funds and all our parliamentarians, both opposition and government alike, will be loaded with cash payouts by the government as bribes to maintain their political power.

The government will simply pay everyone off and that way maintain its position in government. With the LNG gas project underway and all that money floating around the country, the present batch of politicians in power will not allow anybody to get them off the scene that easily. There is just too much money at stake. And you can bet your last kina that the major players supposedly representing the state's interest in the LNG Project all have personal slices of the cake slotted in somewhere in the project agreements or associated agreements.

What the Opposition ought to do is to consolidate their political base and then start to plan their line of attack to gain the numbers to form a government in 2012. People lament that the Organic Law on political parties that maintained a stable government has been thrown out the windo. For those people, let us ask them one simple question: Political stability for what purpose? And how has that political stability in the last three years since 2007 helped PNG?

When you start to question the rationale for political stability, you come to realize that Sir Michael and his gangsters had used political stability as a platform to violate the constitution, appoint their own people into positions of power and influence and pass any laws at will using that political stability. Is this what we want to gain from political stability?

Yes, we have problems copying the Westminster system of government and we have multitude of other problems both social and economic, but these are simple signs that there is something wrong with both the people in government and the citizens themselves. When you look at these problems, they are signs that we are not doing our job well or there are areas in the lives of our people that we are not attending to. Thus, when you experience political instability then the onus is on the politician to take a closer look at his own backyard to determine why the problem, where it is coming from and then attend to that problem. And why are we so paranoid about political stability or instability?

The entire Westminster system of government needs to undergo a major overhaul. Presently, we elect our members, send them to the parliament and from there, they are swallowed up by the political party system.

The moment they identify themselves with a political party, they switch their allegiance from their constituents to the party and thus become subservient to the political whim of their party leaders who then use them for their numbers to form a government. The party leaders then select their preferred members to become Ministers of State whereas the bulk of the party members have to join the back-bench as "political dropouts".

Meanwhile, those few members who become Ministers of State become the biggest beneficiaries of the Westminster system of government with their prime minister presiding. The prime minister who heads this horde of baboons feeds on or lives off the national treasury whilst the rest of the members of parliament roam the corridors of power like hyenas scavenging for any leftovers. This case scenario is the underlying cause for the political instability. That majority of politicians on the outside get tired of watching those inside feasting to no end, hence this eagerness to break into the inner circle to partake in the feasting.

Thus, the moment the elected member reaches parliament, he becomes a slave to the political wishes of his party leaders. His voters on the other hand are left without a voice both in the parliament and within the machinery of government especially if he did not make it as a minister. The ball game is then elevated to be played within a rather superficial field or level of policies, technocratic influence and self serving interests of the party bosses which further isolates the political dropouts and thus renders them redundant in their status (as people's representatives) and any good intentions they may have had become obsolete or meaningless. The unfortunate parliamentarian who did not secure a ministry is like a soldier on the battlefield with plenty of bullets, but no rifle. He has been stripped of his rifle by his political party bosses. And as Dr Allan Marat found out, he cannot scream and yell if he has lost his rifle to his political bosses.

What we ought to do is to have a second look at this system of concentration of power in the hands of a few fortunate members who are appointed ministers. The rest become spectators and are used by the governing political party to constitute a quorum during parliamentary sessions to enable the crooked government to pass laws like the amendment to the Leadership Code and the amendment to the Environment Act.

We ought to bring in reforms to ensure that parliament maintains its supremacy and not to be used by the governing political party as its dishwasher. This is total abuse of the view that the national parliament is the supreme law making body in this country. Looking at it now you would think that the National Alliance and its leaders are the supreme lawmakers and breakers in this country.

And even if we chase foreign investment out because of our political instability in the country, so be it? So far 40 years after independence and given all that foreign investment in the country, how better off are our people now? They are even poorer than they were in those past years. And look at our politicians like the Sir Michael Somare, Sir Julius and Sir Mekere. Are these gentlemen poor because they had spent most of their lives in the service of the people with no time to do private business?

Political instability in this country is a sign of the times. Given time and given the right exposure, our people will reach a point in their lives when political, economic and social theories will be shaped by realities to become norms and that way readily acceptable to the people at large.

At this stage, politics like anything else in PNG, is fluid, hence the shifting political tides in large part being dictated by the manner in which the political powers in government use and abuse their public offices. We have yet to build up a tradition of fair play by observance of established practices and procedures.
