Where did we go wrong, Papua New Guinea?

PAPUA New Guinea is known as one of the most corrupted countries in the world. And this is a status we acquired only after 30 to 35 years of independence.

Obviously, people like the Prime Minister Sir Michael Somare and other prominent politicians and long time civil servants are aware of this unfortunate classification that we have received, but to date, there has been no response from the national government either denying that statement or refuting it and at the same time, offering some explanation as to how and why we were tagged with that stigma.

It is high time we Papua New Guineans did some soul-searching to determine why we went wrong and how, and then further determine if there are ways we can fight bribery and corruption and eliminate it from Papua New Guinea.

It is a known fact that bribery and corruption in PNG is not an isolated practice or transaction. Bribery and corruption in this country has reached endemic proportions.

At a superficial level, the institution of State is very much alive; the machinery of government is still operative; the rule of law appears to be functional, and there is some social order in the country.

But when one starts to look behind the scene, what stands out the most is that the machinery of government is not operating impartially in a routine manner by application of established procedures under the rule of law.

Since independence, the whole spectrum of the PNG society has undergone a complete transformation. In particular, the institution of State and the machinery of government have now become a billion dollar business for the politician, his family members, business associates and his cronies.

Thus, our system of government no longer functions as a public institution for the benefit of the public at large. Any benefit that ultimately trickles down to the public, is at best, an incidental aspect of the whole exercise which is geared for the benefit of the corrupt politician and his kind.

The frightening aspect of it all is that bribery and corruption in Papua New Guinea is now a way of life, a way of staying in business, and it is what keeps the State and the machinery of government in operation.

Just look at the Honorable Peter O'Neill, who has been appointed by the PM as the Finance and Treasury Minister. This MP was referred to unfavourably in the POSF Enquiry so his record in dealings of a financial nature were suspect, and this ought to cast a bad cloud over his status, but for the prime minister, this is not relevant. What is relevant is that Peter O'Neill is a close associate. Whenever the prime minister shouts, 'jump', he gets a prompt, "how high, Sir?"

The PM needs people like that to look after the national cheque book.

This is the kind of corruption we are talking about. The kind of considerations that ought to apply in matters of appointment to public offices have been discarded, so that such appointments are no longer based on considerations of merit including experience, good track record and personal integrity.

Papua New Guinea is the only country in the world where an ex-convict, a thief, and a child molester can hold public office.

The kind of consideration that merits appointment these days is the ability to deliver upon command without any question so that the more gullible a person is, the better his chances of being appointed to a public office of significance.

We pose the question: Is there any hope that things will soon change for the better so that we can get rid of this phenomenon of corruption in this country? Yes, we would like to see a change, but the indications to date are that corruption in this country has burrowed deep within the whole spectrum of society so as to permeate the entire system of government and public administration so that it has now become a way of life in PNG.

It is not an easy task to talk about changing this phenomenon, let alone, eliminate it forever from PNG society.

There is a saying in Africa that goes: "No wise man spits out juice put into his mouth".

Thus, when you realize that corruption is a billion dollar business in this country, you are awed by that realization and a sense of helplessness creeps in, before you become powerless, numb or simply slip into 'apathy mode' like where we are today.

The common man on the street now feels powerless to control the phenomenon of corruption and thus apathy reigns throughout this country.

From time to time, we get individuals like Professor Nonggor shouting 'murder' from the wilderness and then you hear objections from lost souls like Peter Donigi and if you're lucky, you get good people like Dr. Allan Marat and Belden Namah speaking their minds. But ultimately, the wind stops blowing and the seas calm and it is back to business as usual for the corrupted society of people and their multi-billion corruption business.

Thus, we return to our question: Any chance that we the people can change this phenomenon of corruption? From the available evidence, the unfortunate answer is a flat "No, not likely in the immediate future" and for the long term, the answer is, "UNCERTAINTY!"

We repeat our assertion that corruption has burrowed deep into society and is now so deeply-entrenched that any form of surgery will not remove it. In this country corruption is big business and corruption pays its bills so people can and do get rich by occupying positions of power and privilege; people get rich by making decisions affecting people's lives and career.

Yes, we may elect a new batch of politicians in the year

2012, but what good is that when they enter a service that is already corrupt? They will simply get corrupted like the rest; that, we call "corruption by association or corruption by circumstance" so that ultimately, they get fully sucked into the system.

Thus, corruption in this country is like a big black hole out there in space that is notorious for sucking anything that gets within reach. In this country, corruption sucks!

We are now heading the way of the South Americans. How do they do it over there? In South America, the saying is: "If we cannot change the corrupted system by the ballot, then we have to do it by the bullet".

Unfortunately, this is the way we are now heading in this country.

Slowly, the government is depriving the people of access to different avenues for addressing their grievances like the Leadership Code and the Environment Law Amendment and the refusal for people to stage peaceful demonstrations. This, in turn, is creating a bottle-neck situation which in time, will explode.

Our hunch is that if we do not get into civil unrest of some magnitude in this country, then we are creating conditions for the rise of a dictator. If that happens, then let us pray that it would be a benevolent dictator and not otherwise.

This is the way history unfolded itself in Africa and the Americas.

We already have likely candidates on the political scene busy spending public money and singing out daily praises for themselves in the local media.
