KIKSTATIM DEI WANTAIM

Bribery and Corruption is a sin against the spirit soul

In this column some time ago, we said that in our view, the phenomenon of bribery and corruption was here to stay so that there is nothing we can do about stopping it.

However that may be, the debate against bribery and corruption ought to be kept alive so that in time, we may be able to find a solution to the problem.

Thus, as a starting point, let us say that man is a composite being; the personality characterized by the ego is one part of the person and the other part of the person is the spiritual being characterized by the spirit soul. This should lead us to query if the phenomenon of bribery and corruption is solely a physical phenomenon or whether it has a spiritual undertone.

We all may have to rethink our approach to the problem of corruption in this country. So far we have been fighting bribery and corruption in government solely as a physical phenomenon and to a greater extent (and looking at it outwardly or externally) we are correct in that it is a personality trait exhibited physically and it deals with physical or material objects like exchange of money to facilitate a personal favour. However, when one localizes the phenomenon to the person of the individual involved in corruption, and looking at it inwardly from the view of that person, then the phenomenon of bribery and corruption is no longer a solely physical phenomenon.

Yes, the problem is a physical phenomenon, but we believe it has a significant spiritual undertone given that man is both matter and spirit combined. Thus, if we were to take a glimpse of the underlying cause of this problem, then firstly, we must localize the problem to the psyche (soul) of the individual involved and then determine why the individual is involved in a deal making that one characterizes as a form of bribery or corruption. Secondly, having localized the problem as an issue of an individual personality trait that has permeated the whole machinery of government in this country, we need to ask the fundamental question: where does the need for a quick material gain in defiance of propriety come from and why is it exhibited the way it has in this country?

In our fight against the problem of bribery and corruption, we ought to enlist the support of psychologists on the one hand to give us a psychological insight into the problem and on the other hand, we also require the input by theologians and spiritually enlightened personalities to highlight the spiritual nature of the problem within the context of this country.

We are neither psychologists nor are we theologians or spiritually enlightened to make the attempt suggested above, but looking at the problem strictly from the point of view of laymen, it is our view that by its nature, the phenomenon of bribery and corruption is all about hording money and gaining favours to build and sustain the personal ego of the individual involved. In other words, it is more likely that such an individual must feel that the more money he can acquire and the more he has by way of material possession or wealth he becomes a big man in the eyes of the people; a man with power and wealth. Thus, in our limited way, we can only characterize the phenomenon of bribery and corruption as an ego problem by the individual involved and hording as a symptom of either an empty ego or an inflated ego.

However, in essence, it all boils down to an issue of external power or the lack of same which has created a gap or a vacuum in the psyche of the individual involved. If we take this reasoning a step further, we have to make a further suggestion that hording money and material wealth is probably the symptom of a personality that feels emptiness all around him with the corresponding feeling of powerlessness to change his status quo. Thus, hording of money and material wealth must be tantamount to filling that gap or vacuum in the psyche of the person involved.

Looking at the phenomenon in another way, it is obvious that from the point of view of the individual involved, the personality trait amounts to greed or lust for physical possession; personal attachment to same; enjoyment of the sense of perception of ownership; and hording to the exclusion of other and fellow human beings, which is generally conduct akin to an animal to members of the lower animal kingdom. Ask any Hindu and he will probably tell you that possibly those individuals involved in bribery and corruption are reliving their underdeveloped soul energy which had not found full expression before their transition or evolution from the lower level of the animal kingdom to the higher level of a humanoid.

Let us go back to the beginning of this column above where we said that man is a composite being; a product of both matter and spirit combined. In that sense then, the outward physical appearance of bribery and corruption must have a deeper root elsewhere and that is within the realm of the spirit soul. May be there is a clue for us in the way Hinduism would look at it under its doctrine of karma. That is, according to the law of karma, the phenomenon of bribery and corruption, at its core, would be characterized as a spiritual problem within the dimension of the spirit soul that has surfaced within the present lifetime to work itself out and in so doing, to enable the soul to reach its full circle or roundedness to complete its experience of evolution as a soul. Maybe there is a clue there for us or maybe not, but these are the kind of issues we should be exploring in our fight against bribery and corruption in this country.

However, if we look at it from the view of those involved in the practice, a question arises: Do these people who partake in bribery and corruption know that what they are doing is morally wrong? In other words, are they aware as conscious human beings that what they are doing is wrong or is it the case that they are acting from the other angle, namely, that it is conduct in which they are partaking unconsciously?

It is said in esoteric circles that mind is the slayer of the body and the spirit.

Maybe from the view of those involved, they are acting out of habit and not choice, which means that given their level of awareness or consciousness, the question of choice, intention and the will power to achieve a certain value based outcome is never an issue with which they are confronted in their daily lives, hence, their participation in bribery and corruption is in essence, an unfolding of an aspect of their unconscious self; an aspect of the darker part of their spirit soul; or it may be evidence that the participants in bribery and corruption have not reached a point of awareness where they can look inwardly to ask themselves if what they are doing is acceptable.

Thus, looked at in the above context, maybe we are all wrong in criticizing these people who are involved in bribery and corruption.

Looking at the bigger picture, maybe these people need our prayers and our support to increase their level of awareness to come to grips with the underlying reality that they have to walk the path to free their psyche from this unacceptable personality trait called bribery and corruption.

In conclusion, it is our view that we are not succeeding in our fight against bribery and corruption because we are fighting it solely as a physical phenomenon. Maybe we should revisit the phenomenon but at a deeper level of the spirit soul so that we can address it at that level as a spiritual problem rather than solely as a physical phenomenon. This is a rather crude definition of an otherwise complex issue, but we hope that we are paving the way for a better and informed discussion to follow on the topic of bribery and corruption.

Let us pray for spiritual awareness in this country to enable each and every one of us to free ourselves from the grip of our minds and our egos so that we all, can as individual personalities, reach a state of reconciliation between our minds, our bodies and our spirits so that in the end, we can make conscious choices, make conscious decisions and consciously accept the consequence of our conduct as conscious human beings acting responsibly.

We all have said enough in anger and as criticism against those whom we have labeled as corrupted. This is strictly a value-loaded judgement. And on our part, we are guilty of judging and judging our fellow human beings.

Let us now look beyond the physical and join a debate that views both the physical and the spiritual nature of the problem of bribery and corruption. We must pray for our politicians so that in time, they can see God's grace around them and then make a conscious choice to walk in grace.
