The Stalemate continues...

WE have the national elections now around the corner, and yet, the political stalemate continues. Soon the whole nation will be going to the polls, and by July or August, a new government will be coming into power.

And by the look of things, we can almost guess that the same O'Neill camp will be walking back into power and this may then render the issue of legitimacy redundant or obsolete. Effect of this, if it happens, will be to wipe the slate clean and then allow the new parliament to conduct its business with a new executive government in place.

But in our view, the bruises, the wounds and the scars of what took place on the 2/8/2011 when O'Neill and Namah arrested powers off the Somare government will still be there, and the ripples will never reach the shores. Thus, for us Papua New Guineans, it was, and is, a hard lesson to learn.

When you look at our colonial history, we did not shed blood to win independence. We did not slave and toil for the right to govern ourselves. The whole thing was given to us on a silver platter by Australia, who also had a similar history like us in the sense that it was a colony of England at one time.

Thus, Australia was mindful of our political expectations so it facilitated it by aiding us to reach that end. And now 36 years after independence, the question arises whether we can maintain a constitutional democracy under the rule of law. At first glance, it would appear that we may have already taken a wrong turn. The National Parliament seized power on 2/8/11 and threw out the Somare regime and appointed its own prime minister. This event was ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court on 12/12/11. However, Parliament passed amendment laws on 9/12/11, three days before the decision, legalising the conduct of parliament on 2/8/11, thus taking the wind out of the Supreme Court decision given three days later.

Thus, the political situation climbed to a higher level, where the parliament challenged the Supreme Court as to the issue of the law-making body. Properly put, the Constitution is the supreme institution. It is called the Mama Law and from there, we can say that the parliament, the executive and the judiciary are like creatures of the constitution. For all legal purposes, the Constitution is supreme. However, the power to make laws vests with the parliament, and the power to interpret and give meaning to the Constitution vests with the Supreme Court. Thus, if we keep these issues separate, then there ought not to be any conflicts or infighting among these three bodies.

It is our view that half the constitutional issues we are now facing are the outcome of a politically-driven agenda where one group of politicians got fed up with another group, and thus, had them thrown out rightly or wrongly. And on its part, the Supreme Court said rightly that it was done unlawfully. And on the part of the Supreme Court, that is where the matter should be put to rest. However, the Parliamentarians proceeded further to consolidate their position of political power by using their law-making power to oust the Supreme Court decision which is not unusual in many common law countries.

What has happened now, is that Parliament has since filed a Constitutional Reference before the Supreme Court asking the court to rule whether the laws it passed on 9/12/11 legitimising its conduct of 2/8/11 are constitutional. And Dr Allan Marat, the Attorney General by O'Neill and Namah has also filed another reference asking the court to determine other related constitutional issues.

Thus, we are now at a stage where the legal battle for supremacy has moved back into the court house and it is now for the Supreme Court to revisit its own decision in light of the amendments to make legal what Parliament did on 2/8/11. So there is no end to the fight for supremacy.

It is our view that the Supreme Court made its decision on the 12/12/11, putting Sir Michael back into power, but Sir Michael did nothing about enforcement of that decision until just recently when he had filed contempt proceedings against a number of people for non-compliance with the Supreme Court decision. And it would seem that too much water has passed under the bridge, and the issues are not that straightforward anymore.

There are too many issues, and in many cases, these issues are now compounded to the extent that it is now like a legal nightmare for both judges and lawyers to work out.

And with these legal issues now being debated before the Supreme Court, we saw what happened when the Somare camp appointed Sasa as their Commander of the Defence Force. Sasa took control, and in a press conference, said he would enforce the Supreme Court decision to put Somare back in power. Fortunately, not many soldiers felt the necessity for the Defence Force to intervene in a strictly civilian matter.

Thus Sasa was contained, and the attempt was put to rest. Had Sasa succeeded, it would have been a totally different ball-game. We may have seen some blood-spilling events unfolding in the country.

Under the Constitution, the military cannot intervene even in civil disorders in the country until it becomes unmanageable for the police force, in which event, Section 202 of the Constitution allows the government of the day to make a military call-out to come under the command of the police commissioner to contain any law and order problem. Other than that, the military has no role in a strictly civilian matter which police can contain on their own strength. thus, in our view, that was a wrong move to destabilize the Defence Force to intervene in a strictly civilian matter.

We have already destabilized the police force to the extent that there are now two factions within the police force. This kind of conduct must stop. And our politicians must be mindful of the welfare of our people and that way, play strictly by the rules. It is wrong to resort to means which will have the effect of further dividing our disciplined forces.

And finally, now that the national elections are around the corner, the present stalemate does not have a long life to maintain anymore momentum. Yes, by the look of it, one faction will be in charge of the national treasury during the elections, but this is the smaller issue in our view.

The bigger issue is that the stalemate is finally coming to a close. And let us all look forward to appointing good leaders who have the interest of the common people at large.

Let us not vote for those politicians who wish to make a career out of politics to live off the common fund.

May God bless Papua Niugini.
